

National Severe Weather Warning Service

Chief Forecasters Assessment

A vigorous depression passing across southwest Ireland on Thursday evening is expected to move east-southeastwards, crossing southwest England during the early hours of Friday before moving out into the English Channel on Friday morning. Very strong winds are expected to develop immediately west of the depression centre across the extreme southwest of England. There remains some uncertainty about how far east the very strong winds will extend across southwest England but it looks as if the Isles of Scilly and western Cornwall are most at risk.

The Met Office have issued a Yellow Warning of Wind

Valid from 01:00 on Fri, 28th Feb 2014 until 10:00 on Fri, 28th Feb 2014

West or northwesterly winds are expected to increase across the Isles of Scilly and Cornwall soon after midnight with severe gales developing in the early hours of Friday. Gusts of 60 to 70 mph are expected. Winds should begin to ease later in the morning.

The public should be aware of the possibility of some minor disruption to transport.
